FALL 2024 COURSE DESCRIPTIONS

GPSA101 Clinical Assessment and Appraisal (3 credits)

This course provides an overview of the appraisal process including observation, interviewing, measures, resources, and tools to formulate a clinical understanding of clients within a broad range of settings and within a survey of populations. Behavior, observations, etiology, symptomology, assessment, countertransference, and treatment will be examined in working with clients representing the lifespan. The course examines issues of reliability, diversity, limitations, and ethical practice in relation to the validity of the assessments. Students explore the relationship between assessment, findings, diagnosis, intervention and treatment planning.

GPSA184 Psychopathology: DSM, Psychodiagnosis and Case Study (3 credits)

This course examines psychopathology of severely regressed states from the perspective of both the DSM, psychoanalytic theory and case study. This comparative approach to diagnosis includes a consideration of symptoms and behaviors listed in the DSM with psychiatric understanding of etiology and function contrasted with an augmented by a psychodynamic understanding. The two different approaches to the diagnostic process will be explored in the course, including the diagnostic and statistical system (DSM), use of the mental status exam, use of clinical interviewing and induced countertransference feelings. The class also discusses implications for treatment. Students will have the opportunity to begin clinical studies by observing their emotional reaction to the class material and visiting two settings.

GPSA503 Human Development: Adolescence to Adulthood (3 credits)

This course will focus on the intra-psychic, developmental, and biopsychosocial processes that occur during puberty to adulthood will be examined, concentrating on the expression of the basic drives as the individual emerges and separates from the dependencies of childhood and eventually leaves home to start life on his or her own. Freud's hallmark of maturity, "the ability to work and love," will be used to study the conflicts and resistances of these crucial stages. Students examine these processes through readings, case presentations, and personal experience.

GPSA511 The Counseling Profession (3 credits)

This course provides a broad understanding of the psychoanalytic counseling profession as defined by the history, professional standards, scope of practice and application of ethics to theory and practice. The professions of counseling and psychoanalysis are defined and compared through their historical roots with exploration of overlapping practice methods. The importance of personal and professional self-care is emphasized. Students learn ethical decision-making models to assist in making practice decisions.

GPSA526 Resistance and Defense (3 credits)

Psychic defenses are essential tools available to us for dealing with psychic pain. This course will study the use of defenses, from projection and splitting to repression and sublimation, in relation to emotional, psychosexual, and cognitive development. This course will consider mental illness a maladaptive psychic defense process, and psychoanalytic cure a state of mental wellbeing in which thoughts, feelings, and impulses can be tolerated comfortably without resorting to inappropriate action or self-destructive defense

GP535 Couples through the Lifespan: A Modern Psychoanalytic Approach to Marital/Couples Therapy (3 credits)

How does early attachment affect a couple's ability to have a healthy, satisfying relationship? The experience of being a couple grows out of early attachment. This course will explore how couples develop and maintain an attachment. Topics will include how couples maintain intimacy over the lifespan, conflicts including secrets, lying and affairs, patterns of commitment, sex, childrearing, blended families, empty nesting, end of life issues and the continuous requirements for change that naturally develop over the life cycle. When couples make their way to the consultation room, how can the therapist intervene?

GP536 Comparative Psychotherapies II: Theories of Counseling & Psychoanalysis (3 credits)

This course surveys major theoretical schools of counseling and psychoanalysis and how to apply their underlying premises in practice. Students will learn about the contributions of these fields to form a broad understanding of clinical techniques from forming the therapeutic relationship, developing a case conceptualization to interviewing and developing a range of intervention strategies with a range of cases. Special emphasis is placed on how each perspective informs how interventions are developed and implemented according to the treatment progression.

GP552 Introduction to Research in Human Sciences: Quantitative and Qualitative Studies (3 credits)

This course examines the bases of scientific inquiry. It provides a theoretical and practical knowledge of research and methodology, including principles of concept formation and research design. Special emphasis is given to ethical research practices. Students review the important tools, methods, and techniques for sound and ethical research, including the tools and data of outcomes research. They will learn to critically evaluate research literature. After this general review of research in the human sciences, students will study the practitioner scholar model of applying research to everyday practice.

GP555A Proposal Writing: Professional Ethics & the Psychoanalytic Case Study Seminar (3 Credits – companion of 555B but not sequential)

In this companion course to 555B, students will learn how to develop a proposal for or to work on the culminating psychoanalytic case paper in the Certificate program. Students will prepare a narrative of the case dynamics which describes the course of treatment and presents a question about some aspect of the case that puzzles or interests the student; show how the therapist listens in order to form an impression of the individual's emotional experience; write a review of the clinical literature that relates to the research question; and analyze what they have learned when applying further knowledge to case process recordings. This course meets the requirements for the Proposal Writing course as a prerequisite for the capstone tutorial sequence. *Students must submit a request to the training committee for permission to enroll in this course.

GP562 Neuropsychoanalysis and the Resilient Mind (3 credits)

Neuropsychoanalysis is the intersection of psychodynamic thinking and neuroscience. Over the past three decades research in neuroscience has led to breakthroughs that significantly expand our understanding of the brain-mind dyad and psychotherapeutic practice. The importance of considering both the physical functions of the brain and its reciprocal, essential interactions with the subjective mind is clear. Clinical practice is enhanced by a comprehension of neurobiological forces that influence brain function and the subjective experience of being: consciousness and relationship to the world of lived experience. This course will explore the fundamentals of neuroscience that impact the developing mind, adaptive skills, and interpersonal relationships – all in relation to psychodynamic practice. Course resources will include: readings, films, guest lecturers, and case presentations.
